Soldiers serve with 'Valor' in new CW drama

By Jay Bobbin

Got room for one more new military drama on your fall-season viewing menu?

After NBC's "The Brave" and CBS' "SEAL Team" comes The CW's "Valor," premiering Monday, Oct. 9. The series casts Christina Ochoa (of Syfy's recent "Blood Drive") and Matt Barr ("Sleepy Hollow") as U.S. Army helicopter pilots eager to make good on a mission that went wrong in Somalia, by training to return and rescue a colleague (W. Tre Davis) captured by terrorists. Though they have vastly different levels of experience, the duo is bonded by a secret they share.

In a CW lineup still populated largely by superhero shows, with a few side-steps for offbeat comedies ("Jane the Virgin," "Crazy Ex-Girlfriend"), "Valor" marks a different move for the network. "We're very aware of how many military dramas there are," says executive producer Anna Fricke, "but I do think that what drew me to this, and why I was so excited to get to work with Kyle (series creator and executive producer Jarrow) and this great group, is that this is a female-driven military drama ... which I think does set it apart."

Jarrow notes, "We are also really making an effort to look at, and really tell those character stories that dig into military life — not just the action stuff, though we'll deliver that too, but the day-to-day life of folks who serve in the military. What that looks like, what that feels like. So that's a big focus of ours as well that, hopefully, can set us apart a little bit."

Personal knowledge is fueling Jarrow's efforts toward "Valor," since he reports, "My brother was in the military, the 173rd Airborne, for a bunch of years. Folks in the military like my brother, like these characters, are human beings. They are sleeping with people, they're cheating on people, they're struggling with questions of morality and personal choices. It felt really important to dramatize that in telling a full story of what it's like to be someone in the military. Hopefully, we can get some good, soapy intrigue in a way that feels authentic and true to the lives of military folks."

"Valor" star Ochoa maintains that the characters are "human first and military second. I think that everybody deals with relationships and secrets, working in close quarters, regardless of your professional vocation and your activities and the coping mechanisms that you may have for high stress. These characters just maybe have them to a different degree, but they're very real. And addiction and PTSD are things that are very important for us to tackle, as well as the relationships."

In being true to the profession it depicts, "Valor" is going for accuracy in even the smallest details. "Something that's been really helpful," Barr says, "is that a lot of our extras and background (actors) are retired military or veterans. It's been helpful for Christina and me and the cast to learn from these guys and gals, especially in all those subtleties ... the salutes, just the simple composure. I think they enjoy being there."

Bayonne to Unveil Utility Box Art in Bergen Point on Thursday, October 12

Mayor Jimmy Davis announced that the City of Bayonne will hold an unveiling ceremony for utility box art on Thursday, October 12, at 11:00 a.m. The event will take place at the Bridge Art Gallery, 199 Broadway, in Bayonne's Bergen Point neighborhood. Bayonne's Urban Enterprise Zone (UEZ) has been funding utility box art that has been prepared by six local artists. Mayor Davis said, "Bayonne's UEZ has worked to make our commercial areas more attractive for shoppers and visitors. By placing art on utility boxes in our commercial areas, the UEZ is improving the visual appeal of our community. I would like to thank the UEZ and all of the participating artists for making this happen."

Six artists have participated in the program. They are Samantha Llanes, Stephanie Petersen, Jeff Ware, Maria Lupianez, Tiffany Patrice, and Gary Wyans.

Samantha Llanes earned a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in Animation at the School of Visual Arts. Her professional experience includes creating stage design for children's plays, often using children ages 6 to 12 in the set-building process. She teaches storytelling through set design and art. Her skills include layout and background digital coloring, pen and ink, illustration, layout pencil line work, conceptual art, and group work. As part of the UEZ program, she turned a rusty, old utility box into a work of art at 8th Street and Broadway.

Stephanie Petersen is a photographer and graphic artist. She grew up in Bayonne, and is raising two sons here with her husband. She loves Bayonne and thinks it is a great place to raise her children. Stephanie is a graduate of the School of Visual Arts. She has worked with top cosmetic and fragrance companies to create and install graphic images for special events and product launches. At 8th Street, she has created art with heavy-duty, outdoor commercial-grade vinyl that is intended to attract viewers.

Jeff Ware is a resident of Bayonne, and has been employed by the Bayonne Department of Public Works for ten years. He has transformed two fire pull-boxes into a work of art. He has worked on several murals in Bayonne and New York. He is happy to see that Bayonne is transforming and is making Broadway more appealing. He believes that art brings beauty to a community. Jeff is honored to have the opportunity to take part in this project.

Maria Lupianez is a resident of Bayonne and an artist. She painted a utility box at 7th Street and Broadway. She is a mother of ten and a full-time student who found the time to transform that utility box. Maria enjoys being creative and is a lover of art. After giving birth recently to a baby boy, she gave herself two weeks of rest, then went outside to create a work of art.

Tiffany Patrice has always loved being creative. A lover of all art, fashion, drawing, painting, music, writing, and everything in between. If there is anything creative going on, she wants to be part of it. Once she realized that she could combine her love of art with fashion, she set her sights on New York City. With a fashion degree in hand, she left her Midwest roots for the Big Apple. While working in the corporate fashion world at some of the top fashion companies, she continued to pursue her great interest in art. After much soul-searching and a strong desire to follow her dreams, she decided to return to her true passions - drawing and painting. With much excitement, Tiffany decided to leave the corporate world and follow her artistic dreams.

Gary Wyans is a Jersey City artist and loves to have the opportunity to participate in the utility box art project. He has a daughter who lives in Bayonne, so he appreciated the opportunity to submit an art proposal to the Bayonne UEZ. Gary was happy to be chosen for the utility box project, so that his daughter could see his art in Bayonne and be proud. He has done several murals and art on numerous utility boxes in Jersey City, from Downtown up to the Heights. In Bayonne, he has painted a large utility box right off of Cottage Street.

dish in a white wine sauce, a delicious chicken parmigiana, or a specialty pork chop sauteed with vinegar peppers and mushrooms. Whether you are someone who goes for a special combination of chicken and eggplant parmigiana or someone who prefers food right from the broiler, Laico's has you covered! Top that off with a satisfying dessert or an after dinner hot beverage and you'll be hooked.

If you've never been to Laico's before, you might need more than just my word to convince you of its worth. That's not a problem either, as they were the recipients of the reader's choice award in New Jersey Monthly. This is a true testament to the passion they have toward this business. ## 'Mr. Robot' returns for Season 3 shrouded in mystery

By George Dickie

Many an actor will tell you it takes time to come down from a particularly grueling or intense role at the end of a day, a season or a series.

Martin Wallstrom hacker Tyrell Wellick on the USA Network cyber-drama "Mr. Robot," enjoys his job, even if it means living in the skin of such a para-noid, driven character.

"It's a lot of fun to play someone who takes everything so personally," the 34-year-old actor explains by phone from his native Sweden, "and I can promise this season there will be a lot of intense scenes when it comes to him, which I think it's been great and the writing I've enjoyed it so much. So yeah, what we saw at the end of Season 2, we will have a lot more of that, I'd say in terms of intensity and things going on."

At this writing, very few details were available on what's ahead in the series' third season, which gets underway Wednesday, Oct. 11, save for that it's the aftermath of the 5/9 attack and Elliot (Rami Malek) has survived the shooting by Tyrell at the end of Season 2. Word has it that Wallstrom's character will play a bigger role this season, but beyond that the actor was reluctant to elaborate, lest he give away spoilers.

"Basically we will see what happens, how the world looks after the 5/9 attack and how ... the world is falling apart," he says. "And I would say that this season it's a lot more like Season 1 in terms of the pace and it's more like external drives and what happens to the characters. So I think it's more like Season 1 in that sense."

"And we will get some more explanation what happened," he adds of the shooting, "and also Tyrell and Mr. Robot (Christian Slater) are sort of working together, which we could see when they started the 5/9 together. So we will see that and more of their cooperation. And let's just say that a lot of questions will be answered when it comes to Tyrell."

After a critically acclaimed Season 1 that attracted a loyal and passionate viewership, the series' second season seemed a let down to its fans, with complaints that its storylines became too complicated and cryptic. Wallstrom hopes the events of the third season will quiet those criticisms and help the regenerate the original buzz.

"I've been around for a time and most of the stuff that you do ... you don't get fan bases like that," he says. "But when something like this happens, it's hard to believe, I guess. But I think we're all very grateful for this and people seem to respond to it."

mander's threat to destroy the Orville by asking the enemy whether he thinks marriage is easy. (To which, of course, the alien thoughtfully responds.) On the other hand, "Star Trek" fan MacFarlane also is observing many traditions of the genre, so it works both ways.

Q: Someone told me that on "The Bob Newhart Show," Bob and Emily were supposed to become late-in-life parents. Is that true? — Joanne Lawrence, Buffalo, N.Y.

A: As Newhart tells it — and has told us — he wanted to end his classic 1970s CBS sitcom one season shy of the run he was contracted for. The show's writers came up with a final-season premise in which Suzanne Pleshette's Emily would become pregnant, and Newhart's response to the first of those scripts was, "Who are you going to get to play Bob?"

From the start, Newhart didn't want children on the show to set it apart from the smart-kids, not-so-smart-adults trope.

And in the end, he got his way ... and got out of making a seventh season of the show, though of course, he would return to CBS several years later with the Vermont-inn-set "Newhart."
