Jon Snow grows more cynical on HBO's 'Game of Thrones'

BY JOHN CROOK

When Jon Snow (Kit Harington) first joined the Night's Watch in Season 1 of HBO's "Game of Thrones," he did so as an idealistic, somewhat callow young man who saw the world in clearly defined black and white moral terms.

As "Thrones" returns for its fifth season Sunday, April 12, however, the character has been dramatically changed by his two years (give or take) at Castle Black and his experiences in the wilderness of the North. Ygritte, the beautiful wildling who fell in love with Jon when he infiltrated her army, died in the huge battle at The Wall that capped Season 4, and Jon's time with the wildling leader Mance Rayder (Ciarán Hinds) taught him that people often aren't as they first appear.

"When we first meet Jon (in Season 1), he is all about honor and duty," explains Harington, 28. "It's very clear to him who are the bad guys and the good guys. Where we find him this season is really interesting, because having spent time with who he thought were the bad guys – the wildlings, whom he now calls the Free Folk – he doesn't really trust anyone who he maybe should trust as he would have done before."

That puts Jon in a decidedly awkward situation where his allegiances are concerned. The men of Castle Black were rescued at the eleventh hour by the army of Stannis Baratheon (Stephen Dillane), head of the royal family once served by Jon's father, Eddard "Ned" Stark. Stannis holds Rayder captive as the new season opens, yet Jon's lingering respect for the latter leaves him conflicted as to where his loyalties should lie.

"Before, he would have gone into Stannis' pocket straightaway, when they first met," Harington says. "But now Jon is world-weary. He's seen a lot of death, so now he sees shades of gray in people, which makes him more cautious and perhaps astute when it comes to dealing with what this world throws at him. I really think Jon is more cynical now, essentially. He knows what his duty is, he knows what he swore to, and that still is the core of him, because he's a man of his word, like this father. But he is far more cynical about who he trusts and who he doesn't."

He's not allowed to reveal whether the new season finally will see Jon Snow venturing out of the North, but Harington says that if he does, Jon likely will return eventually to his homeland.

"Throughout the season there are opportunities for him to leave," Harington says. "The likely answer to that question (of whether he does leave) perhaps lies in how he has had a chance to do other things in the past rather than stay at Castle Black – and how he turned those opportunities down."

The actor says he's very excited for fans to see the upcoming new episodes, although he has some advice for them: "Don't get too attached to anyone."

REVIEW

"CINDERELLA"

One thing has to be said about Disney's live-action revamps of some of its animated classics: The studio sure gets the casting of the villainesses right.

Glenn Close proved it as Cruella de Vil in "101 Dalmatians," then it was Angelina Jolie's turn last year in "Maleficent." Now, Cate Blanchett is the wicked stepmother in the latest version of "Cinderella" ... and if her typically superb acting alone doesn't guarantee the two-time Oscar winner will excel in the role, the way the film showcases her fortifies her memorable work.

You know the story – and, clearly, so do director Kenneth Branagh and screenwriter Chris Weitz (who has done much good screen work in tandem with his brother Paul). That's apparently why they do a bit of expansion, with Blanchett's character a particular beneficiary, explaining the psyche and reasoning involved much as Jolie's Maleficent did.

While it's the flashier performance by nature, the movie does have a notable Cinderella in Lily James ("Downton Abbey"). Her natural appeal makes it all the easier to root for the heroine to overcome her grim circumstances and – with the help of a Fairy Godmother (Helena Bonham Carter) – be in the right place at the right time to catch the eye of a prince (Richard Madden, of "Game of Thrones").

With the visual sheen that Branagh and company put on the story, this is pretty much the "Cinderella" that anyone would hope for, very stately and quite entertaining. This having been one of Disney's top properties for so long, one has to expect it would get the same sort of care as Tim Burton's tackling of "Alice in Wonderland" several years ago.

It does, and such other fine talents as Hayley Atwell (recently seen as TV's "Marvel's Agent Carter"), Stellan Skarsgard and the great Derek Jacobi lend their acting touches as well. The result nearly makes one jealous of youngsters whose first taste of "Cinderella" this will be, and their elders can rest assured that it's faithful enough to be acceptable as the definitive edition for them.

The picture also has an ace that all other versions haven't, and her name is Blanchett. And happily, she's a "card" that this "Cinderella" knows exactly how to play.

Cate Blanchett adds spark to Disney's live-action 'Cinderella'

PBS documentary recalls a 'Giant' movie

BY JAY BOBBIN

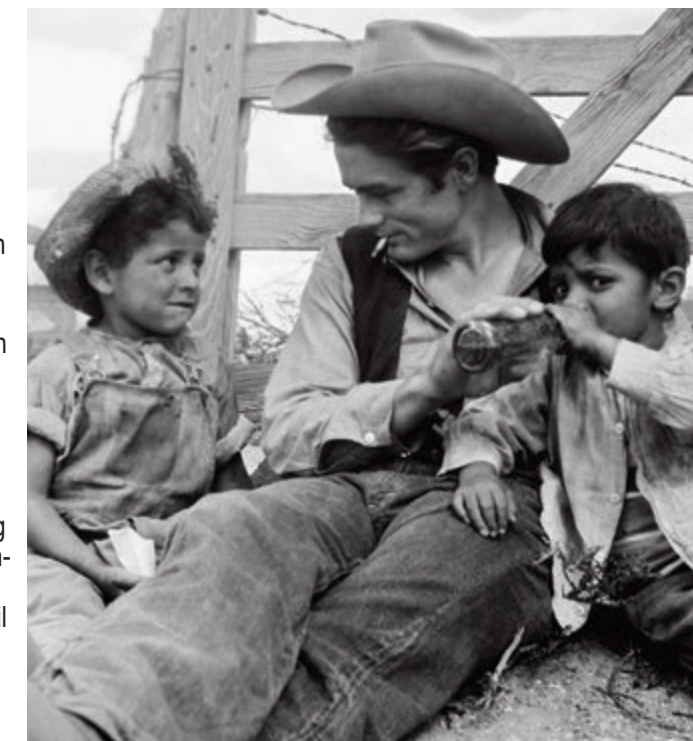

One of the major movies of 1956 truly was "Giant," in many ways – particularly for the residents of Marfa, Texas.

Director George Stevens earned his second Oscar bringing a cast that included Elizabeth Taylor, Rock Hudson and (in what would be his final film) James Dean to the town to make the sweeping version of Edna Ferber's novel, which dealt in part with Mexican-American relations. Stevens' producer-director son, George Jr., and others discuss the impact of the filming on all concerned in filmmaker Hector Galan's documentary "Children of Giant," the first Season 4 offering of PBS' Latino arts and culture series "Voces" Friday, April 17 (check local listings).

"It gave a lot of (local) people employment," recalls Stevens Jr., an assistant to his father on the Warner Bros. picture, "and of course, it filled the hotels, and many of the cast and crew stayed in people's houses. My father had this notion that he really wanted the town to be part of the picture, and it was an open set. The people from town, if they wanted to come out and watch shooting, they were welcome. So from my perspective, it was a wonderful place to make that film, and I'm sure it informed the film with some of the spirit of the people who lived there."

Shown often on Turner Classic Movies, "Giant" weaves the saga of wealthy Texas rancher Bick Benedict (Hudson), his wife Leslie (Taylor) and maverick ranch hand – and later oil tycoon – Jett Rink (Dean). Mexican actress Elsa Cardenas made her Hollywood debut as Juana, who married into the Benedict family; also featured in "Children of Giant," she was present when word came of Dean's car-accident death on Sept. 30, 1955.

"The phone rang, and Mr. Stevens answered the phone," she says. "The lights were off, and he told us what had happened. It was around 7:00 (p.m.), and it was horrible news for us. Elizabeth was very sentimental and she started crying. All of us, we were very, very upset. The next day, we were all like we didn't want to talk. We didn't want to say anything."

Also in both "Giant" and "Children of Giant" is veteran actor Earl Holliman ("Police Woman"), whose character Bob Dace also joined the Benedict clan via marriage. He expresses pride for having been in the film, and also for being part of an atmosphere that was "always mixed" in ethnic terms.

"It was always Mexican, always American," he notes. "Everybody was laughing. It was like the circus had come to town. It was a festival for all the time I was there. It was glorious, what was happening in Marfa."

The end is nigh on The CW's 'The Messengers'

BY GEORGE DICKIE

A meteor streaks down from the heavens and crashes to Earth, the resulting shock wave temporarily stopping the hearts of five disparate strangers.

When they re-awaken, they find themselves inexplicably imbued with extraordinary gifts ranging from superhuman strength to the ability to heal. They're now connected as the five Angels of the Apocalypse, and they may be the only hope for preventing the impending Rapture or end of the world, as prophesied in the Bible's Book of Revelation.

That's the storyline of The CW's intriguing and visually striking new sci-fi drama series "The Messengers," premiering Friday, April 17. Filmed in the New Mexico desert, it stars as the five strangers Shantel VanSanten ("Gang Related") as scientist Vera Buckley; Sofia Black-D'Elia ("Betrayal") as abused young mother Erin Calder; Joel Courtney ("Super 8") as bullied high-school student Peter Moore; JD Pardo ("Revolution") as Raul Garcia, a federal agent looking to escape his assignment in a violent Mexican drug cartel; and Jon Fletcher ("City of Dreams") as Joshua Silburn Jr., a charismatic televangelist who posits that the apocalypse is under way.

That idea is bolstered by the presence of a mysterious figure known only as The Man, who offers Vera to be reunited with her kidnapped son in return for her help with one morally complicated task. As we come to find out, it is a deal with the devil – literally.

In creating the fallen angel Lucifer, Portuguese actor Diogo Morgado says he tried to get away from the Bible's graphic interpretation and instead make him more human.

"We try to excuse him more and give him a background that will lead you to why he does what he does ...," explains Morgado, who ironically enough has played Jesus Christ in "Son of God" and the History miniseries "The Bible." "So for me, it was more about using and abusing the tools that we have as humans that we understand, like manipulation, sarcasm and having this big smile when somebody really wants to stab you in the back.

"So all of that stuff that is common sense as being bad and manipulative," he continues, "I used that but not in a demonic way. It's more of a human thing because I think it's more important to bring the idea of the evil that we know and we all can relate with every day than the supernatural evil."

As much a character in this end-of-times tale is the location of the New Mexico desert, which executive producer Trey Callaway says was chosen for its arid beauty and expansive vistas.

"The pilot really creates this beautiful visual pallet," Callaway says. "It's been described as 'Close Encounters' meets 'The Stand.' You know, it's got a really cinematic scope to it, and I think a lot of that is because of the beautiful, natural vistas of New Mexico. They don't call it 'The Land of Enchantment' by accident. It really is a visually sumptuous place to shoot."

JAY BOBBIN'S Q&A

CHARLESESTEN 'Nashville on ABC'

Christina Aguilera starts a multiple-episode guest arc on "Nashville" this Wednesday, April 15. What are your thoughts about her joining the show?

Talk about verisimilitude or, as I call it, "stealing from the truth" when we're playing this world of a pop diva who wants to come and be part of country. I don't think we could have made a better choice. We're real lucky to have her.

Who are some other music stars you've met who have particularly impressed you?

I did a Christmas show with Kelly Clarkson at (Nashville's) Bridgestone Arena – her charity event, and she was kind enough to invite me to be a part of it. I've gotten to know her a little bit, and I have not heard a note that she cannot just shine with. Her voice blows me away. It's not at the exclusion of anyone else, but she's one of the most amazing singers I've heard.

Though you've kept a home in California, as "Nashville" nears the end of its third season, do you feel like a resident of that city?

Technically, I'm a resident of Tennessee now, and I have been for a little while. We just ended up selling our (West Coast) house, so we are full-on Nashvillians ... and my whole family has just fallen in love with this town and the special people they have here. It's great to give back to a place that has given me everything.

We miss all our friends back there, of course, but thank goodness for social media.

The kids are able to stay in touch with their friends, and so are we.

If you are looking for fantastic Italian food welcome to Carmela's Piccola Cucina. To enjoy fine Italian cuisine with friends or family, head to 578 Avenue C, in Bayonne, right across the street from Shop Rite.

At Carmela's Piccola Cucina, you can enjoy a whole variety of Italian specialties along with your choice of a bottle or glass of fine wine. The restaurant is owned and operated by Chef Carmela Suppa, who is a Bayonne resident. Carmela graduated from culinary school and is a former chef at the High-lawn Pavilion, in West Orange, New Jersey. She has catered many functions in Hudson County and knows exactly how to make her customers happy.

You can come in and enjoy a wonderful pasta bolognese meal or an amazing chicken scaloppini, topped with prosciutto, spinach, and mozzarella in a light sauce. Better still, try Carmela's delicious homemade gnocchi among other tantalizing pasta dishes. Carmela's also has great appetizer selections, salads, fish dishes, chicken dishes, and other delicious meat options.

After a freshly made salad, get ready for a great meal and then treat yourself to a lovely dessert, baked freshly each day.

If perhaps you'd prefer to relish these marvelous meal options in the comfort of your home, call for free delivery (15 dollar minimum). This way, you can enjoy mouth watering Italian cuisine without ever leaving the house. Just call 201-243-6855. Carmela's serves lunch and dinner. The kitchen is open daily from 11 a.m.

Catering is available for all occasions on and off premises. Whether it be a graduation, communion or repast Carmela's has a package for every budget.

There are many more selections than the ones mentioned that will certainly appease your appetite. Just check out Carmela's menu on the next page. Call or come in now and taste Carmela's fine Italian cuisine, in her cozy and comfortable restaurant or in your own niche at home. And be prepared to come back again. One time at Carmela's is guaranteed to lead to more. Enjoy!

RORY MCLLROY

SEEKING MASTERS STATUS

BY DAN LADD

Winning a major is the ultimate accomplishment for any professional golfer, and the Masters Tournament is certainly no exception. When it comes time to tee off on the final day at Augusta National Golf Club on Sunday, April 12, if he makes the cut, there will be one player with somewhat more at stake than the rest of the field: Rory McIlroy.

The reigning World No. 1 on the PGA circuit can accomplish a number of goals, should he be fortunate enough to slip on the coveted green jacket at the end of the tournament, which airs Thursday and Friday, April 9 and 10, on ESPN, before moving over to CBS for the weekend rounds. A victory at Augusta would not only be McIlroy's first Masters win, it would also complete his grand slam. He won his first major, the U.S. Open, in 2011 after blowing a lead on the final day of the Masters that same year. He's since rebounded nicely, winning two PGA Championships (2012 and 2014) and also taking the British Open in 2014.

A Masters victory would put him in the same company as Tiger Woods and Jack Nicklaus, as he would join them as the only players to complete a career Grand Slam by the age of 25.

McIlroy leads defending Masters champ Bubba Watson in the rankings. He also just replaced Tiger Woods as the cover figure of EA Sports' PGA Tour video game. Still, nothing beats the taste of victory that winning the Masters could provide.

FULL NAME:

Rory McIlroy

BORN: May 4, 1989 (age 25)

HOMETOWN: Holywood, County Down, Northern Ireland

HEIGHT/WEIGHT: 5 feet, 10 inches/160 pounds

SWINGS: Right

PGA TOUR WINS: 9

MAJORS WINS: U.S. Open, 2011; PGA Championship, 2012 and 2014; British Open, 2014

'Orphan Black'

sends in the (male) clones

From its very first episode, BBC America's "Orphan Black" has held fans spellbound with its complex and fantastic story of British con woman Sarah Manning (Tatiana Maslany), who was stunned to discover the truth about her identity: She was one of many genetically identical women who were conceived via in vitro fertilization as part of a cover operation called Project Leda.

As the story unfolded, three other clones – soccer mom Alison, brilliant microbiology student Cosima and unstable Ukrainian Helena, all played by Maslany – joined Sarah's inner circle and helped her ward off any threats to their little "family." The show's writers, however, waited until the climax of Season 2 for their biggest reveal: the existence of similarly produced male clones created as part of a sinister companion program called Project Castor.

As the critically acclaimed sci-fi thriller returns for its third season, Saturday, April 18, we begin to meet more of these male clones, all of them played by Ari Millen. The actor had joined the cast earlier in Season 2 as Mark, a member of an eerie religious cult, but viewers didn't know he was a clone at the time. At the end of that season, Helena was abducted by agents of Project Castor and kidnapped to parts unknown for purposes just as shadowy.

"I can say that the clones are all in very disparate worlds right now," Maslany says. "At the beginning of Season 3, there's a real fractured element to the sisterhood. We don't know exactly where Helena is, and Sarah has had this revelation about the Castor clones, and Alison is in her own little suburban world, while Cosima's life hangs in the balance."

Millen didn't learn that Mark, his original character, was a clone until much later, at which point he began to study how Maslany handled the more highly technical scenes – including a Season 2 party scene in which Sarah, Alison, Cosima and Helena freely interacted. He was thrilled when he saw some footage of him sharing a scene with himself.

"It was a little surreal, but it certainly made me very excited," Millen says. "Until you see it, you don't really know if it's going to work. You're in the dark, and I would think, 'Are these guys going to look like different people? Is it really going to translate?' But it's just a really cool experience."

The introduction of male clones also means Maslany doesn't have to do quite so much heavy lifting this season.

"The show continues to be somewhat from my clones' point of view, but there is a huge element that is now being lifted off my shoulders that Ari is carrying," Maslany says. "His clones have just as much at stake in this world and as much complexity as mine do. We've also had so many amazing guest stars and recurring guest characters on the show, and the supporting cast has been playing a bigger part in the show, too."
