TV PIPELINE

By Jay Bobbin

Q: Now that Sandra Oh is on the series "Killing Eve," does that mean she'll never return to "Grey's Anatomy"? — Erin Scott, via e-mail

A: Regular readers of this column know our logic-based fondness for saying that "never" is a very long time ... and impossible to predict. With that said, Oh recently echoed those sentiments by mentioning that she has no plans to resurface on "Grey's," noting her desire to put more separation between herself and that show as she tackles new ones — particularly since she still gets this question for years after leaving the hospital drama.

Sandra Oh

Sue Daniels, Owosso, Mich.

A: Presumably go back to making movies, which gave her the visibility for the Fox sitcom to be built around her ... very particularly the popular "(500) Days of Summer," in which her character had many of the qualities that her "New Girl" alter ego Jess has possessed. Also, Deschanel now has something she didn't when the show began — two young children by her second husband, movie producer Jacob Pechenik ("Song One," "Cold Comes the Night") — so spending more time with them likely is a priority for her.

Q: Is "Crazy Ex-Girlfriend" ending? — Judy Thompson, East Stroudsburg, Pa.

A: It depends on who you ask, at least as of the time this was written. When The CW announced the renewals of just about all of its series for next season, Rachel Bloom's frequently musical comedy-drama was among them — which prompted her to tweet that it would be back "for a final season."

The network hasn't confirmed that the show's fourth year will be its last, but if its principal creative force is of that opinion, it has to be taken with more than a grain of salt. That's not to say that things couldn't change, but it strikes us that Bloom wouldn't merely toss that off without there being something behind it. She and others involved with the show have been doing live concert performances of its music lately, and whether those might factor into her deciding to go beyond Season 4 (if she has a choice in that) remains to be seen.

They may not be not 'Dying' — but they're not at all well

By George Dickie

The first season of "I'm Dying Up Here" introduced viewers to a group of early '70s Los Angeles comics with hopes of stardom and enough baggage to fill a fleet of 787s. In Season 2 of the Showtime drama, we learn where all that pain comes from.

As the 10-episode sophomore season gets underway Sunday, May 6, the storylines switch from the goings-on at the Sunset Strip comedy club Goldie's to the personal lives of the stand-ups themselves: Cassie (Ari Graynor), the Texas transplant carrying around a secret that leaks into her personal and professional lives; Nick (Jake Lacy), grappling with demons that make it difficult to stay away from heroin; Ron (Clark Duke), whose overnight success on a TV sitcom proves far more problematic than his former obscurity; Eddie (Michael Angarano), now in a relationship with Cassie and writing jokes for Roy Martin (guest star Brad Garrett, "Everybody Loves Raymond"), a Vegas comedy legend with a few demons of his own; and Adam (RJ Cyler), who finds doors opening, professional and otherwise, thanks to a hit comedy album.

And then there is club owner Goldie herself (Melissa Leo), who it turns out doesn't have the happiest relationship with her daughter Amanda (guest star Stefania LaVie Owen, "The Carrie Diaries"), a sullen 18-year-old who flogs her divorced mom with silence.

It's a veritable cornucopia of angst that might not be great for the morale of the characters involved, but for the actors playing them it's dramatic gold. That's especially the case for Graynor, who appreciates how the show's writers fleshed out Cassie as a strong woman in a man's world in Season 1 and gave her a big storyline this go-round.

"Right off the bat, they told me about this very big secret that sort of influences everything and really begins to be a major factor in a lot of self-destructive behavior," the actress explains. "You know, some of it's her fault, some of it isn't but there's a lot of shame and self-loathing underneath and I think it's a fascinating thing in life how we all compensate for those things where we punish ourselves in unconscious ways. And I think you really get to watch that with her and a lot of other characters as well."

Probably the most noteworthy among them is Roy Martin, the unhappy comic played with a commanding presence by Garrett. He's a sour, world-weary figure with an obvious disdain for the other comedians at Goldie's — and perhaps the strongest character of the new season.

"Oh my God! I love that guy," enthuses series writer/creator David Flebotte. "He has chemistry with every single actor. He's great with Melissa. He's great with Michael Angarano. He's great with Cassie. He's just a guy you could put him anywhere and he ups the energy level like by 50 percent. He's just great and he's so fun to write for."

"He's just tortured and a lot of it is mental illness," he continues, "and drinking and coke and whoring and all the other vices. But what's great about him is there's a self-awareness to it. It's not just someone running reckless. It's someone tortured knowing that they're tortured, knowing that they're not right."

Ari Graynor stars in "I'm Dying Up Here," which opens its second season Sunday on Showtime.

The heroes and villains get up close and personal in Season 3 of 'SuperMansion'

By George Dickie

As the voice of Robobot on Crackle's stop-motion superhero satire "SuperMansion," series writer/co-creator Zeb Wells derives endless comic possibilities from the character's uber-calm and reasoned tone, one that's reminiscent of HAL-9000 from "2001: A Space Odyssey."

"I just wanted to capture that creepy, calm computer that is such a staple of so many sci-fi movies and television shows," he explains. "But then I think it's hilarious to take that calm, even-keeled, completely logical voice but then give it a little bit more flavor and hear a little bit more of emotion or hear some sarcasm out of that voice, (which) just never stops being funny to me. ... Just someone who can very calmly tell you to go screw yourself."

As the 13-episode Season 3 begins streaming Monday, May 7, the League of Freedom have come to an uneasy truce with the Injustice Club after Dr. Devizo (voice of Chris Pine) saved the world at the end of last season. And that means everyone is living under one roof, thus making grudging roommates of Devizo and geriatric superhero Titanium Rex (Bryan Cranston), and randy squirrel Buster Nut (Tom Root) and American Ranger (Keegan-Michael Key), while feline Cooch (Heidi Gardner) and canine Chet (Wells) are forced out to the yard and Robo-Dino (Pine) must sleep in the upstairs bathtub.

If familiarity does indeed breed contempt, then expect this unhappy group to declare all-out war.

"Dealing with the heroes in close quarters was just too much fun to pass up," Wells says.

Also, Rex gets closer to daughter Lex (Jillian Bell) and we learn in the opener that Rex has a special place in world history. And "Saturday Night Live" cast member and former "Robot Chicken" writer Mikey Day joins the voice cast as Max Penalizer, a character Wells calls a "vigilante anti-hero sort of in the Punisher mould."

As for Robobot, he continues his quest to learn about humanity, even at one point setting his sights on a possible career.

"In (the third episode), there's a trial and he just decides that he is going to watch a bunch of '80s television from David Kelley and become a lawyer," Wells says. "So now he's walking around in this ridiculous power suit and this wig and acting like a complete idiot."

City Unveils Monument to Douglas O'Neill, MIA in Vietnam

On April 26, City officials, veterans, and family members gathered at 8th Street and Broadway to unveil a memorial to CWO Douglas O'Neill, a U.S. Army soldier from Bayonne who was declared missing in action in Vietnam in 1972. Mayor Jimmy Davis said the site was being dedicated to Douglas O'Neill, "never to be forgotten as Bayonne's hero." The triangle-shaped site includes a plaque and military memorial art that combines the shapes of a helmet, a gun, and boots. The memorial artwork is surrounded by small bushes and flowers. O'Neill's sister, Ellen O'Neill Cunningham thanked the City of Bayonne for establishing the memorial, which she described as "so lovely."

Following the unveiling, the crowd went across the street to the Bayonne Community Museum. Mayor

Davis presented Ellen O'Neill Cunningham with a framed poster of Douglas O'Neill. The poster includes his portrait and military information. On behalf of American Legion Post 19, Mike Wilson said concerning Mayor Davis, "This administration has done more for veterans than any other administration. He takes care of our veterans." Mr. Wilson presented Mayor Davis with a veteran's hat and other post apparel.

The memorial area was constructed and arranged by the Bayonne Department of Public Works and Parks. Public Works Director Gary Chmielewski thanked Supervisor Joe Cannarozzo and his crew for completing the work.

THE BOLD AND THE BEAUTIFUL Ridge assured his heartbroken daughter that he was in her corner. Eric was impressed by the new Forrester intern, Emma. Hope appreciated Liam's input on her current line. Liam debated whether to stay with Hope or leave with Steffy to go to her ultrasound appointment. Brooke and Ridge bickered over their daughters' relationships with Liam. Liam and Steffy grew closer after receiving a scare at the OB appointment. Bill wasn't fazed after learning that Det. Sanchez hadn't solved his case yet. Wyatt confided in his father that he called off his engagement with Katie. Bill used information he gained from Wyatt to his advantage. Wait to See: Justin gets caught in the middle of Bill's latest scheme.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES Rafe and Hope were forced to arrest Chad. Steve ran into Gabby while she was on the run. Ciara and Wyatt put the past behind them. Claire had a heart-to-heart with Julie. Ciara and Tripp worked together to trap an unwitting Claire. Eli sought advice from Julie regarding Lani's condition. Concerned about Brady's commitment to win back Eve, Victor made an inquiry into his grandson's past.

Later, Eve was furious when she mistakenly believed that Brady rigged the Bella contest. Steve was frustrated with himself after letting Abigail slip through his fingers.  Precision is the name of the game on Food Network's 'Best Baker in America'

by George Dickie

Jason Smith

Jason Smith, a judge on Food Network's "Best Baker in America," finds that the elite pastry chefs competing on the series all share some common traits, including what the self-taught Kentucky-based chef calls the ability to "adapt and modify."

"They start pulling out the French style and the different types of styles of baking and pastries ... and then they try to use that in an everyday dessert that we all know, say it's a strawberry shortcake or a cheesecake," he explains. "So instead of us getting a very, very nice-tasting cheesecake, you get an exceptional cheesecake that you really just can't find anywhere. So they start pulling out all their baking prowess and ...

you're seeing desserts that every single thing that they do is so well-done that it just absolutely blows your mind."

In the second season of the competition series, which gets underway Monday, May 7, Smith joins host Scott Conant, fellow judge Marcela Valladolid and rotating guest judges including Yolanda Gampp, Gemma Staord, Florian Belanger and Zac Young to put the contestants through a series of challenges to determine which possess the skill and artistry to advance through seven episodes and vie for the title of "Best Baker in America" and a $25,000 grand prize.

Included in the many gauntlets the contestants must run is the Skills Challenge, in which the bakers are tasked with creating a basic recipe like a vanilla cake. On the surface it's a deceptively simple assignment, but Smith says its simplicity can often lull contestants into overconfidence, at which point mistakes occur.

"It's because they're not paying attention to detail and it is so basic," Smith says. "Sometimes the basic is harder to do than a very elaborate cake or an elaborate dessert. So that's what I always tell people, is, 'OK, you think this is going to be easy, but you have to pay attention to what the recipe is saying. You have to read the instructions thoroughly. You have to make sure you're doing each one of those steps as closely as possible because it will not turn out.'

"If you decide that, if the recipe says all-purpose our and you use self-rising, it's not going to turn out the same," he continues. "So a lot of people think, 'Oh, I can just take a shortcut because it's such a basic recipe, it won't mess it up.' And it does every time. It's not going to work."

bestof MARILYN MONROE PORTRAYALS BY GEORGE DICKIE

Misty Rowe ("Goodbye, Norma Jean," 1976) Rowe — who got the role after the winner of a nationwide look-alike contest decided not to do the film — made one of the first attempts at dramatizing Monroe's celebrated, famously tormented life.

Catherine Hicks ("Marilyn: The Untold Story," 1980) Before she became a popular television mom on "7th Heaven," Hicks traced Monroe's life from childhood to death in this ABC drama.

Theresa Russell ("Insignificance," 1985) Though she's known as "The Actress" in this comedy-drama, the character clearly is Monroe as played by Russell in a cast that also includes Gary Busay as "The Ballplayer" (Joe DiMaggio), Tony Curtis as "The Senator" (Joseph McCarthy) and Michael Emil as "The Professor" (Albert Einstein).

Susan Griffiths ("Marilyn and Me," 1991) The early years of Monroe's life are the focus of this ABC drama, in which the "Me" of the title was Robert Slatzer (played by Jesse Dabson), a writer who maintained he had a very close relationship with her. Ashley Judd and Mira Sorvino fantasy sequences as Judd played the reality of the subject's pre-stardom life while Sorvino embodied the glamorous, iconic Monroe image.

("Norman Jean & Marilyn," 1996) The two actresses split the central role in this HBO drama, sometimes appearing together in

Poppy Montgomery ("Blonde," 2000) On her way to becoming a series star in "Without a Trace" and "Unforgettable," the Australian-born Montgomery had one of her first major roles in this CBS adaptation of Joyce Carol Oates' novel, which refers to Monroe's husbands Joe DiMaggio and Arthur Miller as "The Baseball Player" and "The Playwright."

Charlotte Sullivan ("The Kennedys," 2011) Seen more recently on "Chicago Fire," the former "Rookie Blue" co-star brought her interpretation of Monroe to this Emmy-winning miniseries that was made for History, but ultimately was shown on Reelz.

Michelle Williams ("My Week With Marilyn," 2011) The "Dawson's Creek" alum earned an Oscar nomination and a Golden Globe Award in this drama about young Colin Clark's (Eddie Redmayne) assistance to Monroe as she filmed "The Prince and the Showgirl" with demanding co-star, producer and director Laurence Olivier (Kenneth Branagh).

Kelli Garner ("The Secret Life of Marilyn Monroe," 2015) The relationship between Monroe and her mother (Susan Sarandon) was examined in this Lifetime miniseries that also featured Emily Watson as Monroe's foster mother.
